Every year in the World Earth Day we have a special reason to pause. We are reminded that the environment is in crisis and that we must act now. While there is no silver bullet, there are steps we can take to make a difference. One of the most important things we can do is to reduce our carbon footprint by making small changes in our daily lives. These changes can have a big impact on the environment.

In reality, many of the steps we take are changes to our behavior. For example, we can switch to public transportation, use reusable bags, and reduce our water usage. These small changes can add up to a significant impact over time.

We need to make sure we are part of the solution. Each of us has a role to play in saving the planet for future generations. By taking care of the Earth, we can ensure that it will be there for our children and grandchildren to enjoy.

We can all make a difference. Even small actions can make a big impact. So let’s all do our part to protect the environment and ensure a better future for all.

ONCE UPON A TIME IN LEH, 40 YEARS AGO

Leh has morphed into an urban slum defied by hordes of tourists insensitive to either conservation, ecology or cultural heritage of the Himalayan jewel. But what if contemporary developments mar the magical memories of its past?

NEHZALI SANDHU

T H S year, when I was posted to Leh, it was a delightful multi-choice question: to live in Leh or move to the capital of Ladakh, Srinagar? As the capital of the Union Territory of Ladakh, Srinagar is considered the region's cultural and political hub and a gateway to the Khardungla Pass, one of the world's highest motorable roads. Leh, on the other hand, is a small town in the northernmost part of Jammu and Kashmir, known for its Buddhist monasteries and the surrounding mountains.

I chose to live in Leh, a decision that turned out to be just under 10,000 feet above sea level. The altitude made its way into the conversation at odd intervals, where one could not help but notice the difference between the city and the surrounding mountains. It was a stark contrast to the city's hustle and bustle, where the air was thinner and the views more spectacular.

The town's landscape is dominated by the Himalayas, with snow-capped peaks stretching as far as the eye can see. The town is surrounded by a stunning natural beauty that is hard to replicate in any other city.

Leh is the junction of two major highways, the Leh-Manali Highway and the Leh-Kargil Highway. The town is known for its vibrant culture and rich history, with many ancient monasteries and temples.

The town is also known for its unique lifestyle, with the local population living a simple and peaceful life.

The town's economy is largely dependent on tourism, with many visitors coming from all over the world to experience its unique culture and natural beauty.

Leh is a great place to visit, but it's not without its challenges. The altitude can be tough for some, and the town is relatively isolated, with no major cities nearby.

Despite these challenges, Leh is a wonderful place to live and work, and I highly recommend it to anyone interested in exploring the beauty of the Himalayas.

C omments, eh? That is what the anonymous comments section asks in jest. I was once told by my grandmother to call her a ‘“ sensation” of 1980, but not to worry, she would forgive me. The comments section is like a garden of flowers where one can pick any flower to add to their bouquet. It makes one wonder why we are so eager to share our thoughts online, where we could not possibly be the only one who feels the same way about a particular topic. The comments section is like a mirror, reflecting our thoughts and feelings back to us.

But why do we feel the need to comment? Is it to express our opinions, or to try and influence others? Do we want to be heard, or do we simply enjoy the feeling of having our thoughts validated? The comments section is a space where we can be free to express ourselves, to share our thoughts and to connect with others who may share our interests.

Yet, we must also remember that our online presence is just that: online. It is not a true reflection of who we are off-screen. Our comments may be read by others, but they are not a true representation of our personality.

So, the next time you feel the urge to comment, ask yourself: ‘Who am I really trying to please?’. The comments section is a tool we can use to express ourselves, but we must also remember to use it with care.

TACKLING TRUST DEFICIT IN HIGHER EDUCATION

All of us have a stake in the future of India need to tell the government to stop meddling in higher education. Trust the university administration to do good for the university. Trust the teachers to do the best for the students. The government needs to do away with its control of higher education.

What is expected from them? Do they expect to teach or to research? Do they expect to produce new knowledge or to share it with the world? The government needs to trust the universities and their administrators to do what is best for the students.

China says no third party needed after PM MODI, Trump discuss Ladakh standoff

BEIJING, JUN 3: On Wednesday, there was no third party involvement in the current border dispute between China and India, China's foreign ministry spokesperson Geng Shuang said.

When asked to comment on reports in the Indian newspaper Times of India and local Chinese newspaper Global Times, Geng said China and India have a history of handling disputes through dialogue, and both sides have strict rules for managing border issues.

“Now the situation (at the border) is tense and unstable,” Geng said, adding that both China and India have been “very clear in our positions.”

The Chinese embassy in New Delhi said on Wednesday that the two sides have been in a “virtual border stand-off” since April, and that China had been seeking to de-escalate tensions.

A roadblock in India's Arunachal Pradesh state created a stir in Delhi, with the Chinese foreign ministry blaming India for the impasse.

“Both countries have agreed to withdraw their troops to avoid any possible confrontation,” the Indian embassy said.

In Beijing, Chinese Foreign Ministry spokesperson Zhao Lijian told reporters that both sides were in talks to resolve the issue.

“Both sides have agreed to retract their troops to avoid any possibility of any confrontation,” Zhao said.
